We provide an extra blanket of security.”

— Willie Ng, CEO/President

Ng’s late grandfather emigrated from China and fought in World War II for the United States Army. After the war, the late Mr. Gim Ng opened multiple restaurants in the downtown San Antonio area for over 40 years, including the popular restaurant Jimmy’s Café, which catered to police officers.

“Growing up in that environment, being surrounded by law enforcement professionals, really inspired me,” Ng says.

High Standards, Personal Attention

Ng founded Blue Armor Security in 2003, after recognizing a growing need for high-quality private security services to supplement the work law enforcement agencies were doing. Since then, this minority-owned firm has expanded from a single employee to more than 90 full-time professionals, with more available on short notice when needed. All officers undergo thorough background checks and drug screenings before they are assigned to guard people or property.

“What makes us different from most private security firms is the additional training our officers receive,” Ng says. “Our main instructor at our Training Academy is retired military. Many security companies will send their officers through our academy because our instructors are well-versed.

“One reason we are successful is the level of attention we give our clients,” Ng adds. “We have the highest professional standards, and we are available 24/7.”

With the success of Blue Armor Security Services, Ng launched a new division in 2009—Blue Armor Security Systems—to provide residential and commercial alarm systems and security camera installation. The company also offers highly specialized private investigative services. Whatever the need—armed or unarmed security, 24-hour surveillance, marked or unmarked patrols—Blue Armor Security has the experience, the integrity and the dedication needed to help clients prevent crime more effectively.

“The police can’t be all places at all times,” Ng says. “We provide an extra blanket of security.”
